Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos

Teachers and principals from Melbourne to Townsville enjoyed an exciting and personalised program of Asia Literacy professional learning in January, visiting schools and cultural sites across Vietnam and Cambodia. This was a very popular program and registrations are now being received for late 2011 and early 2012. Due to the popularity of this program we will be running a Vietnam program in December just before Christmas, and a second program with Cambodia and Laos options from 2 January. Bookings for these programs are already being received. Closing dates will be 15 August for the December program and 15 September for the January programs.

Calling All Primary Schools Without LOTE Programs

The long term benefits to children learning a second language are becoming universally recognised by educators. If your primary school does not have the resources to support a LOTE program in one of the major languages, your students could greatly benefit from a new program based on a foundational language that is easily taught by non-language teachers. This is a fully tested and highly acclaimed approach for building the foundations of second language skills for young children. This program will build the core skills and confidence to learn any of the major languages in the later years of their schooling.

Are Your Students Asia-Wise?

The Asia-Wise Competition, which attracts over 20,000 secondary school students annually from throughout Australia and New Zealand, tests general knowledge of the Asia-Pacific region, focusing primarily on history and geography. However, like all Giant Classroom educational programs, the Asia-Wise Competition encourages the development of a student's research, analytical and interpretive skills in finding answers and solving problems rather than functioning as a pure memory test.

Former teacher and Giant Classroom founder David Reid says that, "The reason we created the Asia-Wise Competition in 1992 was to facilitate a greater understanding between our country and the different cultures and societies that exist in Asia. We felt that this connection, once established early, could be fundamental in the growth of tolerance and mutual progress."

Thrilled to see his program run successfully for nearly two decades, Mr Reid acknowledges that making life easier for teachers is also one of Giant Classroom's primary aims. It only takes about an hour of class time to introduce. Teachers choose when they will do the competition during the set two-week period during the year, and are not required to spend any time preparing or marking as the entire process of receiving questions, submitting (and partly sourcing) answers and receiving results is performed online. Teachers also receive feedback on

Sister Schools in China & Vietnam

Three schools in Western Australia, South Australia and Queensland are the latest to join our Asia Literacy Sister Schools program in the past month.

We currently have access to a large number of schools in China and Vietnam interested in sister school relationships. We offer a partnering program with ongoing school relationship support in Australia and in the host country.

The Asian schools we offer have English speaking liaison teachers, a range of student levels and are well equipped with ICT. Many of the China schools are resourced and keen for two way teacher and student exchanges.

We plan Asia literacy on a whole school, cross curriculum basis and offer a comprehensive support service as part of school membership.

how their students performed against national averages in key areas. Sample questions in the Asia-Wise Competition might include studies of a particular person, Latitude and Longitude-related problems as well as cultural based investigations.

"A great competition!" says Colleen Carr, the SOSE coordinator at Mt Aspiring College in Queensland. "The students enjoyed doing it."

The Asia-Wise Competition is supported by the Asia 2000 Foundation of New Zealand, which was established in 1994 to develop New Zealand's links with Asia and its people.
